Active* Consent, USI and Galway Rape Crisis Centre: “Start Here” campaign

Active* Consent and the Union of Students in Ireland (USI)’s Sexual Experiences Survey of college students in 2020 found that 79% of students in the survey who disclosed non-consensual penetration had told a close friend about what happened to them.

Like the characters in Duck, Duck, Goose, individuals may find it difficult to receive a disclosure from a friend or family member if they are not trained professionals. And as the action of the play reveals, how you receive someone’s disclosure matters.

Where would you start if someone disclosed to you?

Active* Consent, USI and Galway Rape Crisis Centre joined together to create the “Start Here” campaign to help individuals be more prepared to support others.

“Start Here” provides basic dos and don’ts for language to use if someone discloses to you and resources to point people towards for professional support including how to report.

Access the tips and find national resources and information on reporting for survivors of sexual violence here: <https://www.nuigalway.ie/activeconsent/start-here/>

Active* Consent is an Irish national programme based at National University of Ireland, Galway that uses workshops, research, drama and social media interventions to support young people from 15-25 to have positive and confident sexual health and well-being. We work directly with young people as well as groups that are important to them, from teachers to parents, college staff, and policy makers. To find out more about our research or book programming/training with us, visit www.nuigalway.ie/activeconsent/
